BERKELRUÏNE

go up the remnants of the mediaeval watergate

Group rates available, starting from €2 per person excl. booking fees *

You could say the so-called 'Berkel ruin' is the last mediaeval watergate of the Netherlands to have stood the test of time.

It was built as the final stage of large-scale urban expansion works to take place in Zutphen around 1350. The gate is also relevant to the history of monument preservation in Zutphen, as the famous 19th-century architect Pierre Cuypers took it upon himself to reshape the structure as a Romantic ruin. Subsequent renovation attempts around 1951 damaged the gate. The most recent renovation works sought to bring out the gate's interesting history.

GO UP THE WIJNHUISTOREN

Group rates starting from €3.50 per person, excl. booking fees, incl. tea or coffee *

The world's first tuned carillon awaits at the top of this ornate belfry tower. The Hemony brothers of great worldwide renown installed the carillon in 1644; of the set, one original bell still remains. A tavern by the name 'Vreden' on this location was acquired by the city in the 14th century. Around 1642, city architect Edmond van Hellenraeth added the tower to the existing Wijnhuis. Two years later, the carillon was installed. Last century, disaster struck the historical tower – it burned down both in 1920 and in 1945. Belfry towers of this kind are a rarity in the Netherlands; only Kampen and Zwolle boast towers of equal stature.
